3(b) Five characteristics of tourism products are immobile in ownership, differentiated, unstable demand, perishable and intangibles.

寫於邊界以外的答案，將不予評閱。

First of all, one characteristic is immobile in ownership. What the tourists purchase or enjoy is the experience instead of owning the products. For example, people who visited the Hong Kong Palace Museum can never take away the artworks or crafts, but they have the visiting experience. One strategy that the West Kowloon Cultural District could apply is provide souvenirs to visitors, they allow people to feel respect and care, as well as think the visit is worthy.

Next, another characteristic is differentiated. Even under the same environment, the products or services may not be same as always. For example, Xiqu performances can be different due to different reasons like performers or environment.

Another characteristic is unstable demand. People with unstable demand may not frequently visit. For example, they may just visit once per year. It is advisable for the West Kowloon Cultural District to provide more promotion and activities. For example buy one get one free tickets for visiting Meng Long Palace Museum or Xiqu Centre. In order to attract more visitors to revisit.

In addition, one of the characteristics is perishable. The products or services can not be stored for future use. For example, the tickets of watching Xiqu performances. There will be a valid period on the ticket, it may not be used if passed the valid period. It is suggested for the West Kowloon Cultural District to extend longer valid period of the tickets for visitors. As some visitors may not free in some periods, so if the available time is longer, they can visit.

Lastly, the characteristic is infangibles. people can never see, hear, touch, taste or smell before their purchase. For example, if people haven't buy the tickets for visiting the Hong Kong Palace Museum, they will never see the artworks and crafts inside or hear the explanation by the tour guide inside the museum. It is suggested for the West Kowloon Cultural District to display one to two artworks with explanation and introduction outside the museum to arouse visitors' interest to buy the tickets to visit.

To conclude, the above are five characteristics of tourism products.
